

I remember

You are invited to contribute to Scotland's Covid Memorial by writing an 'I remember'

This simple form is a way to remember loved ones who passed away, or to record your own experience of the pandemic.

A wide-ranging selection will appear on the memorial website, where they will be anonymised, and all contributions will be archived. The website will launch in Spring 2022.

A selection of 'I remember' will be available as part of the final artwork, which is being created in Pollok Country Park, Glasgow, and at satellite venues. A selection will appear in a book published by Stewed Rhubarb in May 2022.

The 'I remember' form was devised by the American artist Joe Brainard. The only rule is that they must consist of a single sentence that begins, 'I remember...'

For the sake of confidentiality please only use first names if you refer to people. We recommend trying to make your memory specific and personal. You are welcome to contribute more than one 'I remember'. Examples can be viewed at i-remember.uk.

You can email your contribution(s) to Alec Finlay, the lead artist on the memorial project at iremember2021@yahoo.com.

The campaign for a national memorial was initiated by The Herald with their partners at greenspace scotland managing and overseeing the artistic commission.
